

Contents

Acknowledgements		ix
Chapter I:	Introduction	1
	1. Foreword to the introduction	1
	2. Descriptive linguistics – objects and method. The functional principle	2
	3. Scientific linguistics. Epistemological considerations	7
	4. The hypothetico-deductive method	36
Chapter II:	Theory and strategy – C'est le point de vue qui crée l'objet (Saussure)	45
	1. Preparing the raw material	45
	2. The relation of theory to description, and of both to the speech-phenomena	51
	3. The axiomatic approach	65
	4. The three legs of the theory	70
Chapter III:	Function, system, and systemology	83
	1. The first axiom	83
	2. The notion 'self-containedness'	84
	3. Earlier stages and development of the theory	87
	4. Further on the theory of semiotic systems, and the sub-systems of language	96
Chapter IV:	Semiotic foundations of axiomatic functionalism – Ontological considerations and the 'linguistic sign'	123
	1. The theory of indices	123
	2. The ontology or 'signum-theory'	151

Chapter V:	Linguistic description I: General principles, and phonology	169
1.	Introduction	169
2.	Practical hints for successful descriptivism	171
3.	Methodology and hypothetico-deductive logic	179
4.	'Pseudo-composites and pseudo-words' revisited	183
5.	Productivity and pseudo-productivity. Analogy as motivation for the formation of new words	193
6.	Productivity and non-productivity in so-called 'derivations'	198
7.	Further notes on 'productivity' and potential pitfalls	200
8.	Some further remarks	207
9.	The notion 'simultaneity'	209
10.	The phoneme as a simultaneous bundle of distinctive features	214
11.	Phoneme tables as practical descriptive devices	220
12.	Consonants, vowels, semi-vowels, and semi-consonants	226
13.	The notion 'position', 'nuclearity', and 'peripheralness' in phonology	228
14.	The notions 'neutralization' and 'archiphoneme'	235
15.	The description of vowel systems	240
16.	Some further practical hints for establishing vowel-systems	246
17.	The English vowel system	250
18.	Some further examples of descriptive problems in phonology	252
19.	Effective phonological description	256
20.	Tone-languages of East and Southeast Asia	271

Chapter VI:	Linguistic description II: Syntax and the sentential level	275
	1. Introduction	275
	2. Direct and indirect tactic and non-tactic relations	276
	3. Functional dependency versus occurrence dependency	288
	4. Correlations between functional dependency and occurrence dependency	291
	5. Parallel determination versus diverse determination	293
	6. The notion 'semi-cluster'	299
	7. The notion 'plereme'	301
	8. Syntactic description	305
	9. Concord and congruity	306
	10. Syntactic patterns in English	309
	11. Some remarks on 'sentence' and 'sentential entities'	365
Chapter VII:	Further examples of syntactic analysis and additional remarks	385
Chapter VIII:	Postulates for axiomatic linguistics. Revised version	435
Bibliography		459
Index to the definitions		463
General Index		467