

Contents

Contents	v
Notes	vii
Note on transliteration	vii
Note on translation	vii
Preface	ix
Introduction	xiii
1. Towards the definition of the grotesque	1
1.1 About the grotesque: An historical perspective	5
1.2 The modern grotesque	17
1.3 Avant-garde and the grotesque	20
1.4 Socialist realism and the grotesque	27
1.5 The formal properties of the grotesque	38
2. Bruno Jasiński's concept of art	45
2.1 Bruno Jasiński's years of futurism	50
2.2 Bruno Jasiński's post-futurist career	64
3. The ambivalent world of Bruno Jasiński's poetry	77
3.1 'Art must be an all-penetrating, mind-blowing surprise'	80
3.2 The artist and the mob	91
3.3 'Life in its constant strenuous mutation'	102
3.4 The social interests of Bruno Jasiński	132
4. The grotesque nature of the dance-rebellion in The lay of Jakub Szela	159
5. The conflation of body and machine in The legs of Isolda Morgan	185
6. I burn Paris as the grotesque novel	213
7. The satirical grotesques of Bruno Jasiński	271
7.1 The ball of the mannequins	277
7.2 'Bravery' – The unusual story	318
7.3 'The chief culprit'	325
7.4 'The nose'	334

Conclusions 349

Sources consulted 359

Index 371