

Table of Contents

Introduction	7
1 Youth in the city. Looking back to the Chicago School of Sociology	15
1.1. The city as a social laboratory	15
1.2. Living the interstices	18
1.3. Mapping juvenile delinquency	22
1.4. Young women	26
1.5. Motion pictures and youth	30
1.6. Looking back to Chicago	35
2 Youth and generations. Background, contents and (in)actuality of Karl Mannheim's perspective	37
2.1. An outdated concept?	37
2.2. The sociological "problem of generations"	38
2.3. Generations and social change	42
2.4. Youth as outsiders	47
2.5. Critical aspects	51
2.6. An open-ended debate	55
3 Youth culture and the peer group. Looping back around to Talcott Parsons	57
3.1. The peer group and the transition to adulthood	57
3.2. The "psychosocial moratorium"	61
3.3. Youth culture and social integration	63

3.4. An “adolescent society”?	65
3.5. Youth culture and the value system	69
3.6. Between sociological analysis and “myth”	73
4 Youth, dissent and counterculture. The “long 1960s” in Goodman, Keniston, and Roszak	79
4.1. The (un)complacent youth	79
4.2. “Growing up absurd”? Paul Goodman’s visionary sociology	81
4.3. Faces of dissent: From youth alienation to youth protest	84
4.4. Roszak and “The Making of a Counter Culture”	90
4.5. A “postmodern youth”	94
4.6. Fury, symbol, value	97
5 Rituals, resistance and style. The CCCS and youth subcultures	99
5.1. A new research agenda	99
5.2. Theoretical foundations	101
5.3. “Resistance through rituals”	104
5.4. The meaning of style	107
5.5. Homology and creativity	111
5.6. From symbolic challenges to incorporations	115
5.7. Subcultures and beyond	117
References	121