

Contents

Introduction: family values in a changing society — 1

- 1 The American family as the basis of the nation: concepts, key questions, and selection of debates — 6
- 2 Norms and values: How can “value change” be studied historically? — 15
- 3 Key approaches: gender studies and intersectionality, expert cultures and scientification — 22
- 4 The U.S. family in historical research — 28
- 5 Period of investigation, sources, and structure — 33

1 “Race suicide or remedy?” The debates on divorce in the Progressive Era, 1890–1920 — 40

- 1.1 Trends in the divorce rate in the United States in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries — 44
- 1.2 Divorce as a subject of public debate to the late nineteenth century — 52
- 1.3 “Social control and women’s place in society”: the influence of sociologists on public debates on divorce from the turn of the century onward — 64
- 1.4 Religious values versus adaptation to modernity: key groups within the divorce debate and their arguments — 73
- 1.5 Interim conclusion: social experts as analysts of social change: the family ideal in the United States at the beginning of the twentieth century — 92

2 “Scientific motherhood, reproductive morality and fitter families”: debates on eugenic family concepts and the government’s right to intervene in the 1920s and 1930s — 95

- 2.1 Demographic change in the twentieth-century United States: population growth, reproduction rates, and family sizes — 102
- 2.2 “Scientific motherhood and reproductive morality” — 109
- 2.3 Better Babies and Fitter Families: the popularization of the “healthy family” through competitions — 117
- 2.4 Forced eugenic sterilizations for the betterment of the American family — 129

- 2.5 Paul B. Popenoe, The Conservation of the Family and the American Institute for Family Relations — 138
- 2.6 Interim conclusion: government and family in the 1920s and 1930s — 151

- 3 “Working women, domesticity, and the expert”: public debates and expert discourses on women’s employment and motherhood, 1940–1970 — 154
 - 3.1 Trends in female employment between 1940 and 1970 — 159
 - 3.2 “Career woman or housewife?”: the debate on women’s employment in the shadow of World War II — 166
 - 3.3 “Mom as a social problem”: the debate on “momism” and failing mothers in the 1940s — 174
 - 3.4 “Women aren’t men” or the “return of the new women”: motherhood and women’s employment in the 1950s — 178
 - 3.5 “Modern women’s neurosis”: the working woman’s psyche and reproduction as sites of negotiation of divergent gender role conceptions, 1950–1970 — 183
 - 3.6 The Feminine Mystique and Equality between the Sexes: feminists, women social scientists, and the working woman — 196
 - 3.7 “A long and difficult up-hill struggle”: African American women, women’s work, and motherhood — 201
 - 3.8 Interim conclusion: interpretive conflicts over the employment, psyche, and reproduction of the ‘modern woman’ — 205

- 4 “Black family pathologies”: the limits of the white middle-class family ideal and the debate on the structure and values of the African American family in the 1960s — 208
 - 4.1 The changing social structure of African American families in the twentieth century — 211
 - 4.2 “The Negro family in America”: structure and values of the African American family in the research of black sociologists — 217
 - 4.3 From the “American dilemma” to the “tangle of pathology”: the black family in the analyses of contemporary social scientists from the 1940s to the 1960s — 221
 - 4.4 “To Fulfill these Rights” and the Moynihan Report: June 1965 — 230
 - 4.5 Perceptions of the Moynihan Report in the African American community — 243

- 4.6 Plans to improve the African American family as a key example of the “scientification of the social” in the mid-1960s — 257
- 4.7 “Race genocide?” Black men and white concepts of masculinity in the 1960s — 263
- 4.8 Interim conclusion: toward an expansion of the national ideal of the family — 269

- 5 “From reproductive choice to reproductive rights”: abortion, reproduction, and the role of women in family and society in the 1970s and 1980s — 271
- 5.1 “Sexual revolution” and “women’s health”: social change in the use of contraceptives and in access to legal abortion since the 1960s — 276
- 5.2 “From reproductive choice to reproductive rights”: the U.S. women’s movement and the struggle over access to self-determined reproduction — 285
- 5.3 Legal framework: Roe v. Wade and the implications for the negotiation of gender roles — 295
- 5.4 The campaign to reduce global population growth, the role of population experts, and the reproduction of the white American woman — 305
- 5.5 “Race,” “class,” and “reproductive rights.” African American women and their struggle for access to self-determined reproduction — 317
- 5.6 “Dramatic shift in the American temperament”: the debates on divorce and the introduction of no-fault divorce — 324
- 5.7 Interim conclusion: abortion as a constitutional right — 328

- 6 “Culture wars?” Debates on the American family in the 1980s — 331
- 6.1 “Dual earners and welfare moms”: the social history of the family in the 1980s — 333
- 6.2 Jimmy Carter’s White House Conference on families and the U.S. family in the early 1980s — 345
- 6.3 Ronald Reagan’s “traditional family values” campaign and its place in the “culture wars” — 352
- 6.4 Abortion and adoption as two poles of reproductive decision-making in the 1980s — 362
- 6.5 Interim conclusion: the family as arena of the “culture wars” — 386

Conclusion: Value of the family—continuity and change in the family ideal in the twentieth-century United States — 388

- 1 Debates and expert discourses on divorce, women’s employment, and reproduction in the twentieth century—a diachronic overview — 389
- 2 Family values and social change in the modern age — 392
- 3 The family as the basis of the nation and the significance of “race, class, and gender” as categories of inequality — 398
- 4 The value of the family rather than value change — 403

Acknowledgments — 407

Abbreviations — 411

List of figures — 413

List of tables — 417

Bibliography — 419

Person Index — 487

Subject Index — 491