

Contents

Foreword — VII

Introduction — XI

- 1 The Statesman: A Formalist Approach to Narrative — 1
 - 1.1 The narrative arrangement of the myth — 3
 - 1.2 The Visitor's speculations on turning raw material into a coherent narrative whole — 12
 - 1.2.1 Selectivity — 15
 - 1.2.2 Causality — 24
 - 1.2.3 Temporality — 30
 - 1.3 Narrating/listening time — 36
 - 1.3.1 The digression on the two types of measurement — 38
 - 1.3.2 The myth's narrating/listening time and the audience's anticipation — 45
 - 1.4 Conclusion — 50

- 2 Timaeus and Critias: Plato's 'Proto-Theory' of Fictional Worlds — 55
 - 2.1 The possibility of fictional worlds — 59
 - 2.2 Fictional worlds are incomplete and indeterminate constructs — 68
 - 2.3 The author's and audience's immersion in the fictional worlds — 80
 - 2.4 Fictional worlds as products of our sociocultural background — 88
 - 2.5 Fictional worlds and intertextuality — 99
 - 2.6 Conclusion — 107

- 3 The Laws: Formalism and Reception Theory Intermingled — 108
 - 3.1 Narration as a means of persuasion and the audience's psychology — 112
 - 3.1.1 The 'teaser' reflections in Books 1–2 — 115
 - 3.1.2 The connections between Books 1–2 and the accounts of Book 3 — 132
 - 3.1.3 The connections between the accounts of Book 3 and the preludes of the laws of Books 4–12 — 143
 - 3.2 The poetics of intentional history — 159
 - 3.2.1 Selectivity and temporality — 162
 - 3.2.2 The ideological 'coating' of the material — 171

X — Contents

- 3.2.3 Creating questions and answering them — 181
- 3.2.4 The narrator's political views as the backbone of the plot — 190
- 3.3 Conclusion — 195

4 General Conclusions — 196

- 4.1 The emergence of a proto-narratology: the typicality of the interaction between metanarrative reflections and narrative paradigms — 196
- 4.2 Plato's sociological perspective on narrative realities — 205

Bibliography — 211

Index Nominum et Rerum — 225

Index Locorum — 229