

Contents

Foreword to the English edition — VII

Preface — IX

Chapter 1

Law, comedy, justice — 1

- Law and comedy: an unnatural combination or an unavoidable pair? — 1
- The third element: the phantom of justice — 7
- The upside-down world: laughter as a sanction of the injustice of law — 10
- Incongruity: who is “good”? — 16
- Another incongruity: the “just” law in the books and the “unjust” law in action — 21
- Another incongruity: the ridiculousness of serious law — 24
- Another incongruity. The ridiculousness of law without communication. Rabelais — 28
- Disappointment — 30
- Relief: the blessed wandering nature of law — 35

Chapter 2

How and why we laugh at law — 40

- Law and the elusive nature of humor — 40
- Law and comedy — 42
- Law and the grotesque (Georges Brassens, Victor Hugo) — 44
- Law and slapstick (Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy) — 47
- The whims of law, or the trial as sport (Conan Doyle and Aristophanes) — 49

Chapter 3

Law vs. Comedy — 64

- Leopardi: law and the ambivalent force of laughter — 64
- Leopardi’s thought and the problem of eutrapelia — 71
- Nietzsche, Don Quixote and eutrapelia — 72
- The return of law to the becoming and the revenge of the phantom of justice — 79
- The force of laughter versus the force of law: satire — 85
- Law, fear, and laughter: satire and dictatorships — 89

Satire and the liberal position of US case law —	92
The middle way: satire and the European legal systems —	94
The maieutic capacity of laughter and its limits: laughing is not always “just” —	96

Chapter 4

In the Vortex of Evil — 100

Comedy and subversion —	100
Sergej Dovlatov: the rebellious laugh —	100
Rob Marshall’s Chicago : when what is right is relative —	106

Chapter 5

The “ridiculous claims” of law — 118

The claim to define subjectivity —	118
The claim to shape society —	124
The claim to define ethics / morality —	131
Institutions and laughter: the emperor’s new clothes —	135
Justice is not of this world (jurisdiction is ...) —	139
Auto da fé : a law without a world / a world without a law —	146

Chapter 6

Who am I and where do I live? Persona, law and laughter — 150

Italian by law: Totò and Fernandel —	150
Persepolis by Marjane Satrapi, or an innocent gaze on the law —	162

A final paragraph in the guise of a conclusion — 175

Appendices by Giuseppe Rossi

Appendix 1

The Good Lawyer and Bardell v. Pickwick — 181

Appendix 2

The Law and the Masochist’s Contract: Notes on Gilles Deleuze’s Coldness and Cruelty — 196

Bibliography — 211

Index — 219