

Contents

Introduction — 1

Chapter 1: Emotional Response as a Normative Guide — 5

- 1.1 What is an Emotional Response? — 6
 - 1.1.1 Emotional Response as Spontaneous Aversion and Spontaneous Attraction — 6
 - 1.1.2 Emotional Response as a Felt Bodily Response — 7
 - 1.1.3 Distinguishing between Two Kinds of Object-Directedness — 10
 - 1.1.4 Emotional Response as Object-Directed 2 — 13
- 1.2 How Can an Emotional Response Be a Normative Guide? — 25
 - 1.2.1 The Negative Role — 25
 - 1.2.2 The Positive Role — 26
 - 1.2.3 Objections — 28
- Conclusion of this Chapter — 32

Chapter 2: Feeling States and Cognitive States — 34

- 2.1 Feeling States (e. g., Emotional Responses) — 40
- 2.2 Cognitive States (e. g., Beliefs) — 44
- 2.3 Objections — 51
 - 2.3.1 Objection 1: Idiosyncratic Division of the Mental Realm — 51
 - 2.3.2 Objection 2: Methodologically Dubious — 62
 - 2.3.3 Objection 3: A Set of Qualities Can Be Incoherent Too — 63
- 2.4 Kinship with the Feeling-toward-Value Theory of Emotions — 66
- Conclusion of this Chapter — 70

Chapter 3: Against the Identification of Normativity with Rationality — 71

- 3.1 The Fallibility of Emotional Responses — 72
- 3.2 Emotional Responses as a Habituated Form of Reason — 77
- 3.3 Educated but Non-Cognitive Emotional Responses: Not Mere “Knee-Jerk Responses” and Not Mere Products of Evolution — 90
- 3.4 Sentimentalism — 97
- Conclusion of this Chapter — 100

Chapter 4: The Virtue of Flexibility and the Unity of Feeling and Cognitive Capacities — 102

- 4.1 The Virtue of Flexibility — 103
- 4.2 The Unity of Feeling and Cognitive Capacities and Three Ways of Failing to Achieve Unity — 109
 - 4.2.1 Virtuous Character: The Unity of Cognitive and Feeling Capacities — 112
 - 4.2.2 The Non-Virtuous Characters: Three Ways of Failing to Achieve
Unity — 116
 - 4.2.3 Being Rigid Is Just as Bad as Being Fickle — 126
- Conclusion of this Chapter — 127

Chapter 5: Spontaneous Aversion and Attraction in “Good Thinking” — 129

- 5.1 What Is “Good Thinking”? — 131
- 5.2 What Are Feeling States, Again? — 133
- 5.3 What Is the Feeling States’ Role in “Good Thinking”? — 138
- 5.4 Extending Our List of Epistemic Standards of Goodness — 149
- 5.5 An Objection: The Difference between “Good Thinking” and “a Good Thinker” — 154
- Conclusion of this Chapter — 156

Conclusion — 160

Bibliography — 165

Index — 175