

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	II
1. INTRODUCTION	14
1.1 State of research	18
1.1.1 Urban encounter: aristocracy and leading civic groups in medieval towns of the southwestern Baltic	18
1.1.2 Social differentiation in the archaeological record of towns	21
1.2 Aims and research questions	28
1.3 Scope	29
1.3.1 Space and time	29
1.3.2 Social groups: the aristocracy and leading civic groups	35
1.3.3 Empirical material	36
2. ELITES – THE THEORETICAL FRAMEWORK	39
2.1 Elite concept	39
2.2 Practices of identification, representation and distinction through material culture	44
2.2.1 Identity and identification through material culture	46
2.2.1.1 Material signatures of medieval spheres of life and social groups	48
2.2.1.2 Barometer objects	50
2.2.2 The town as a stage? Representation and distinction	53
3. METHODOLOGY: APPROACHING HIGH AND LATE MEDIEVAL URBAN ELITES	56
3.1 A reflection on sources and source pluralism	56
3.1.1 Sources and reality	56
3.1.2 Source pluralism and interdisciplinarity	59
3.2 Approaching urban elites – modus operandi	62
3.2.1 Written sources: frames, actors and interactions	63
3.2.2 Archaeological approaches	63
3.2.2.1 Archaeological approach 1: urban courtly culture	64
3.2.2.1.1 Contexts of use	69
3.2.2.1.2 Courtly material culture and further remarks on the selection of the barometer object categories	73
3.2.2.2 Archaeological approach 2: living standards on medieval urban plots	84

3.2.2.3	Archaeological approach 3: urban topography of power	85
3.2.2.4	Archaeological approach 4: stamping identity – seal matrices as carriers of information about status and social conditions	85
3.2.2.5	Archaeological approach 5: elite material culture in medieval Denmark	86
4.	CASE STUDY I: STRALSUND (POMERANIA, NORTHERN GERMANY) . . .	87
4.1	Introduction	87
4.2	State of research and sources	88
4.3	Written sources	89
4.3.1	The aristocracy	90
4.3.1.1	The Princes of Rügen	90
4.3.1.2	Aristocratic families	94
4.3.1.3	Aristocratic scopes of action	95
4.3.2	Civic elites	103
4.3.2.1	Council membership and burgenses in Stralsund	105
4.3.2.2	Tasks and social demarcation of the ruling elite	109
4.3.2.3	Extramural property and citizen fiefs	111
4.4	Archaeological sources	120
4.4.1	Urban courtly culture	120
4.4.1.1	Barometer objects from Stralsund	121
4.4.1.2	Spatial distribution	126
4.4.1.3	Barometer objects from primary deposits and their contexts of use . .	130
4.4.1.4	Social assignments by means of archaeological finds?	137
4.4.2	Living standards on medieval urban plots	139
4.4.2.1	The archaeological plot inventory	140
4.4.2.2	Methodological discussion and remarks	142
4.4.2.2.1	Site chronology, archaeological contexts and temporal frame	142
4.4.2.2.2	The identification of plots in the archaeological record	144
4.4.2.2.3	Quantification and classification of the find material	147
4.4.2.3	Analysis of the plots	153
4.4.2.3.1	NAT-analyses	153
4.4.2.3.2	Barometer objects	161
4.4.2.3.3	Building structures	163
4.4.2.4	Concluding remarks and outlook	166
4.4.3	Urban topography of power	168
4.4.3.1	From lordly dependence to communal freedom? Shifting power relations and their imprint on the townscape	170
4.4.3.1.1	Stralsund's earliest urban development	172

4.4.3.1.2	Seats of power: the princely curia , urban aristocratic estates and the town hall	178
4.4.3.2	Built environment and elite expressions	193
4.4.3.2.1	At home with the elites in Stralsund	207
4.4.3.2.1.1	The curia of the family von Osten	207
4.4.3.2.1.2	The house of the councillor family Wulflam	208
4.4.3.2.2	Aristocratic or civic? Two elite dwellings in comparison	210
4.4.3.3	Elites and the urban space – summarising thoughts	212
4.4.4	Stamping identity – seal matrices as carriers of information about status and social conditions	214
4.4.4.1	Seal matrices as an archaeological source	215
4.4.4.2	Seal matrices of the 13 th and 14 th centuries from Stralsund – sphragistic features and their social significance	217
4.4.4.3	Disposal practice	225
4.4.4.4	Seal matrices as a source for civic elite culture	232
4.4.4.5	The socio-informative value of seal matrices – a reflection	242
5.	CASE STUDY II: NÆSTVED (ZEALAND, DENMARK)	244
5.1	Introduction	244
5.2	State of research and sources	244
5.3	Næstved – sea-trading town on the river Suså	247
5.4	Actors, scopes of action and power constellations in medieval Næstved	254
5.4.1	St. Peder’s Abbey (Skovkloster)	255
5.4.2	The aristocracy and Næstved	260
5.4.2.1	The Danish kings – royal power in Næstved	261
5.4.2.1.1	Husvolden	262
5.4.2.1.2	Royal residence	265
5.4.2.2	Aristocratic property	273
5.4.2.3	Between journeys, administration, negotiation and last resting place	280
5.4.3	Næstved’s civic elites	289
5.5	Archaeological evidence concerning social conditions	296
5.5.1	Barometer objects from Næstved	296
5.5.1.1	Ringstedgade 4: an elite-home in Næstved?	302
5.5.1.2	Barometer objects from primary deposits and their contexts of use	305
5.5.2	Special finds and pottery as a starting point for a social topography	306

6.	CASE STUDY III: ELITE MATERIAL CULTURE IN MEDIEVAL DENMARK – OBJECTS FROM THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF DENMARK .	308
6.1	Introduction and purpose	308
6.2	Data and source criticism	309
6.3	Analysis	316
6.4	On the trail of elite culture? Distribution patterns of “high-class” artefacts from medieval Denmark	320
7.	SYNTHESIS	329
7.1	Urban elite culture – a socio-historical perspective	329
7.2	Urban elite culture – a material culture perspective	335
7.3	Urban elite culture – a methodological perspective	346
8.	CONCLUSION	352
	ENGLISH SUMMARY	358
	DANSK RESUMÉ	361
	DEUTSCHE ZUSAMMENFASSUNG	364
	BIBLIOGRAPHY	367
I.	Unpublished sources and reports	367
II.	Printed sources	370
III.	Literature	372
	LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS	448
	LIST OF APPENDICES	450
	APPENDICES I – 15	451
	PLATES	677