

Contents

Introduction — 1

- 1 “Vertriebene” or “Umsiedler”? Postwar and Cold War Migration and the (Re)Formation of German Identities, 1945–1949 — 23
 - 1.1 Displaced Persons — 27
 - 1.2 Evacuees — 29
 - 1.3 Resettlers in West Germany — 31
 - 1.4 Resettlers in the German Democratic Republic — 34
- 2 Republikflucht and Gastarbeiter: Migration Regimes Within and Between the Two Germanies, 1949–1989 — 37
 - 2.1 Flüchtlinge and Vertriebene in the FRG and the GDR, 1953–1961 — 40
 - 2.2 The Politics of Emigration after the Berlin Wall, 1961–1989 — 45
 - 2.3 Foreign Labor Migration in Postwar West Germany — 47
 - 2.4 Migration and the German Democratic Republic After the Berlin Wall — 50
- 3 Tearing Down One Wall While Erecting Another: GDR Refugees in the West Before and After the Fall of the Berlin Wall, 1989–1990 — 52
 - 3.1 GDR Refugees in the Federal Republic, 1962–1989 — 55
 - 3.2 GDR Refugees in West, Summer and Fall 1989 — 56
 - 3.3 Migration from the Fall of the Berlin Wall to Unification, November 1989 to October 1990 — 63
- 4 Emigration Becomes Internal Migration – A New German Minority and a Crisis of National Identity, 1991–1994 — 73
 - 4.1 Internal Migration in United Germany, 1989–1994 — 80
 - 4.2 Migration and Gendered Identities in United Germany, 1989–1994 — 98
 - 4.2.1 The Right to Work in the GDR: Women in a Full Employment Society — 102
 - 4.2.2 East German Men and Women After Unification — 103
- 5 German Mobility and a New Generation, 1994–2004 — 111
 - 5.1 Internal Migration and Aufschwung Ost — 118
 - 5.1.1 East–West Migration and Gender, 1991–1997 — 119

5.2	Migration from Western to Eastern Germany, 1991–1997 —	128
5.2.1	East–West Discourse After Privatization —	135
5.3	Internal Migration from 1998 to 2004: The Exodus of a Generation —	138
5.3.1	Migration from Eastern to Western Germany, 1998–2004 —	142

6 Conclusion — 149

Bibliography — 155

Index — 161