

Contents

Introduction, focus, sources and method — 1

Part One: The Institutional Background

- 1 English archives: The beginnings — 11
- 2 Records mismanagement — 20
- 3 Preservation, misplacing, destruction, and embezzlement — 26
- 4 Specific record-keeping situations: Provincial and legal records — 44
- 5 Arrangement and description: Inventories, calendars, and records editions — 55
- 6 Attempts at reforming government records before 1640 — 66
- 7 The records in the Revolutionary era — 85
- 8 The Restoration and afterwards — 105
- 9 An ironic counterpoint: Sir Robert Cotton's 'private library' — 118

Part Two: English Archives and the Seventeenth-Century Constitutional Controversies

- 10 Archives' role in the constitutional debates, and the Whig theory of history — 131
- 11 The English legal system in the seventeenth century and the permissions regime for the public records — 140
- 12 The foundation of the seventeenth century: History, Reformation and the 'Ancient Church' — 158

- 13 History-writing, treason, and censorship — 169
- 14 The Society of Antiquaries, primary source research, and the Ancient Constitution — 180
- 15 Sir Edward Coke, Magna Carta, and records seizures — 194
- 16 Parliamentary research orders — 208
- 17 Sir Robert Cotton as archival research assistant to government and Parliament — 211
- 18 John Selden: Archival research, legal history, and constitutional activism — 239
- 19 William Prynne and the counter-revolution in the records editions — 287
- 20 Epilogue to Part Two: The Civil War, the Tower records clerks, and espionage — 317

Part Three: Secrecy and Access at the State Paper Office

- 21 Thomas Wilson's appointment as Keeper: The political background — 327
- 22 The establishment of the State Paper Office — 338
- 23 Francis Bacon, George Villiers, and records classification — 348
- 24 Practical problems at the State Paper Office: Records storage, Jacobean court intrigues, and money matters — 351
- 25 The political uses of history and the Crown's records — 368
- 26 Records accessioning and power politics during Wilson's tenure — 377
- 27 Archives and intrigue: Wilson and the judicial persecution of Sir Walter Raleigh — 388

28 The State Paper Office after Wilson — 399

29 The Civil War and Interregnum — 405

30 The Restoration, records seizures from Revolutionaries, and cataloguing — 409

31 Official secrecy and research permissions — 418

32 Use requests under James I — 424

33 Use requests after the Restoration — 432

Conclusion: English archives and the wider European context — 438

Bibliography — 452

Biographical note — 472

Index of Persons — 473