

Table of contents

The Educational And Protreptic Intent Of The Great Student Of Socrates	9
I. The Frame Of The Debate	9
1. A Mystery that shouldn't be there	14
1.1. A Recurring Temptation	15
1.2. Some Peculiarities of the Dialogues	18
The So-called Aporetic Dialogues	18
The Euthyphro Game: An Early Example of the Omission Technique	19
Referral Techniques and Other Difficulties	22
The Double Oddity of Dialectical Dialogues	24
1.3. An Unknown Plato	28
The Question of Aristotelian Testimony	29
II. Introducing To Philosophy Through Writing	33
1. The problems of a master	33
2. The Problems of Communication and the Phaedrus	38
2.1. The Love of "Beautiful" Speech, Written and Oral	38
2.2. A Speech, Written and Oral, Beautiful and True, Suitable for the Soul of the Listener	42
The Form	46
The Soul of the Interlocutor	48
2.3. The Superiority of Orality over Writing	50
Writing as an Image (εἰδωλον)	53
The Dual Value of Writing	55
2.4. Further References to the Limits of Writing	57
3. Plato's Protreptic Solution: the Game of Writing	59
3.1. The Invention of the "Written Game"	61
The Seventh Letter	63
Important Games	65
A Final Summary	66

Conclusions	68
3.2. The Protreptic Function of the Game	70
4. How to Read Plato	74
4.1 One must play the Games prepared by the Author	74
The Signs in the Text	75
The Problem for the Present-day Reader	79
The Risks in the Concept of Game	80
4.2. We should respect the Genius of the Writer-Philosopher	82
Fiction reveals the Author's Intentions	83
Irony	85
5. Clarifications and Caveats	87
5.1. A Clarification on the Term "Protreptic"	87
5.2. A Reflection on the Invention of Socratic Maieutics	88
5.3. An Example about Reasoning according to Paradigms	92
III. Examples Of Games	95
1. Some Dialectical Games	95
1.1. The Hiatus	96
1.2. Continuity	99
1.3. The Unwritten Philosopher	102
2. The Architecture of the Dialogues	105
2.1. A Paradigmatic Example: The Structure of the Symposium	105
3. Signs Concerning the Development of Arguments	108
3.1. Dialogue and Silent Reading	108
3.2. Meaningful Changes of the Interlocutor	111
3.3. Emphatizations	114
4. Games between Different Dialogues	114
5. The Philebus : Philosophically Relevant Games	117
5.1 The "Greater" Game	118
The Analysis of Concepts	118
Mixture	121
Who Mixes the Mixture	121
The Function of the Game	122

5.2. The “Minor” Game	124
6. An Extreme Example: a Voluntary Mistake	125
7. Why I Insist So Much	128
7.1. The Attitude of the Reader	128
7.2 The Magic of a Great Artist	131
IV. Plato’s Written Philosophy: A Great Protreptic	135
1. The Corpus of Dialogues	135
1.1. The Issue of Chronology	136
Objective Data	136
Subjective Data	137
1.2 The First Dialogues as “Juvenile”	142
2. The Multiplicity of Approaches to a Unified-Multiple Reality	156
3. Some Final Clarifications	159
3.1. A Matter Not Only of Terminology	159
3.2. Esotericism	161
3.3. The Dialogic Form	164
3.4. Dialogue and Refutation	169
3.5. The Coexistence and/or “Evolution” of Methodologies
in the Dialogues	172
The Early Dialogues	172
The Problem of “Hypotheses” and the “Middle”
Dialogues	173
Bibliography	181
Ancient names	193
Modern names	195
Index locorum	197