

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	11
Abbreviations	13
Sources consulted	15
Introduction	19
Theatres and the management of opera in Istria and Dalmatia: the project	19
State of the art, archival material and types of sources	25
Directives of research	33
1 Subsidising the opera seasons	39
1.1 Presence, provenance and amount of the endowment	39
1.2 The funding possibilities without an endowment	48
1.3 The boxholders: identity and role	55
1.4 Census of the boxholders at the coastal theatres	64
1.4.1 The boxholders of the theatre of Pula	65
1.4.2 The boxholders of the Teatro Adamich of Rijeka	65
1.4.3 The boxholders of the Teatro Nuovo of Zadar	67
1.4.4 The boxholders of the Teatro Mazzoleni of Šibenik	70
1.4.5 The boxholders of the Teatro Nuovo of Split	76
2 The search for an impresario	79
2.1 The rules of game: the tender specifications	79
2.2 Provenance and identity of the impresarios	107
2.2.1 Women impresarios on the Adriatic coast	112
2.3 The theatrical agents: their strategies of intermediation	115
2.4 Census of the impresarios and agents in the eastern Adriatic	128
3 Proposing the opera season	171
3.1 The contract proposal: requests and constraints	171
3.2 Asking for references on impresarios and artists.
Solvency of the impresarios	182
3.2.1 References requested by the theatre managements	182
3.2.2 References proposed by the impresario	187
3.3 Theatre network of the eastern Adriatic	190

4	Choosing the impresario	197
4.1	The contract	197
4.2	The licence to perform and censorship	199
4.3	The opera seasons in Pula	211
4.3.1	Census of the opera seasons at the Politeama Ciscutti of Pula	221
4.4	The contracts and opera seasons at Rijeka	225
4.4.1	Cesare Trevisan in Rijeka	227
4.4.2	Mangiamele, Ubaldi and the inadequacy of the endowment	231
4.4.3	The 1870s and the new three-year contract	235
4.4.4	The inauguration of the new Teatro Comunale; famous names at Rijeka	239
4.4.5	The Alpron-Battaglia management and the War years	245
4.4.6	Census of the opera seasons at the Teatro Civico Adamich of Rijeka, then Teatro Comunale, then Teatro Verdi	249
4.5	The contracts and the seasons at Zadar	255
4.5.1	“A company of dogs will come to bark in this theatre”: Sante Utili and the Razzani fiasco	258
4.5.2	Aida on and off: Paolo Massimini and the missed season	270
4.5.3	The Sonzogno years and the many years of Trauner management	277
4.5.4	Census of the opera seasons at the Teatro Nuovo (later Teatro Verdi) of Zadar	285
4.6	The contracts and the seasons at Šibenik	289
4.6.1	“Coppola and Ugonotti! That was the fatal decision”: the last season of Domenico Valenti	293
4.6.2	Ernesto Guerra at Šibenik: impresario, director, procurator, pianist, pedagogue	301
4.6.3	Do it yourself, if you want it done properly: the self-organised seasons of the Mazzolenis	304
4.6.4	Leon Dragutinović and the Croatian company of the National Theatre of Osijek	318
4.6.5	Census of the opera seasons at Šibenik	325
4.7	The contracts and the seasons at Split	328
4.7.1	The director-impresarios: Ladislav Chmelenský, Johann Pištek, Vendelin Budil and the eclipse of Italian opera	331
4.7.2	Italian impresarios in Split	337
4.7.3	Census of the opera seasons at Split	347

5	Opera repertoire in the theatres of the eastern Adriatic (1861–1918)	353
5.1	Opera types and repertoire	353
5.2	Presence and circulation of local composers in the opera programming	373
5.3	The opera buffa repertoire and the Lilliputian companies	381
5.4	The integrity of the score?	385
6	Moving artists and stage materials	391
6.1	Travel and accommodation for the artists	391
6.2	Scenery, costumes, footwear, properties	396
6.3	The hiring of musical material	404
7	Working conditions of the artistic staff	409
7.1	Recruitment of singers	409
7.2	Contracts with singers	413
7.3	The benefit nights	432
7.3.1	Gifts to singers	438
7.4	The chorus singers	442
7.5	The orchestral players	451
8	Concluding note	481
	Archival sources (manuscript, typewritten and printed)	487
	Historical periodicals	509
	Bibliography	515
	Sitography	527
	Index of names and authors	529