

1	Introduction: On Unfamiliar Territory	1
2	Crossing Borders in Southern Africa	13
2.1	Migration from Zimbabwe	14
2.1.1	Historical Background	14
2.1.2	Development and Remittances	18
2.1.3	Migration Waves and Migrant Profiles	19
2.1.4	Migration Motivations and Destinations	20
2.1.5	Return Migration	21
2.2	Migration to South Africa	24
2.2.1	Historical Background	24
2.2.2	Hostility Towards Migrants	26
2.2.3	Explaining Hostility	30
2.3	Zimbabweans in South Africa	35
2.3.1	The Zimbabwean Community	35
2.3.2	The Legal Situation	38
2.3.3	Adversity and Discrimination	41
2.3.4	Migrant Responses to Adversity in South Africa	43
2.4	Synopsis: Difficult Times and Places	46
3	Doing Research in Postcolonial Times	49
3.1	Research Approach and Theoretical Background	50
3.1.1	Theoretical Starting Point: Postcolonial Sociology	50
3.1.1.1	Lessons from Postcolonial Theory	50
3.1.1.1.1	Disciplinary Sociology	50
3.1.1.1.2	Wither Essentialization: Universalism, Eurocentrism, Metrocentrism	51
		ix

	3.1.1.1.3 Postcolonial Relationalism, Standpoint Theory, Perspectival Realism	53
	3.1.1.2 Thoughts of Decoloniality	54
3.1.2	Consequences for Doing Research: Epistemic Changes	57
3.2	Research Methodology	59
3.2.1	Feminist and Post-/Decolonial Feminist Methodology	60
3.2.2	Decolonial and Postcolonial Methodology	62
	3.2.2.1 The Research(ed) Community	64
	3.2.2.2 Obligations of the Researcher	65
	3.2.2.3 Theory of and for the South	66
3.2.3	Decolonial Methods	67
3.3	Applying Post- and Decolonial Insights to Migration Research: Assessing Theoretical and Methodological Presumptions	68
3.3.1	Reflecting Research	68
3.3.2	Avoiding the Pitfalls of Theoretical Presumptions ...	71
3.3.3	Reflecting on the Traps One has Fallen Into	73
3.3.4	Drawing on Relational Understandings and Moving Bottom-Up	74
3.3.5	Choosing Adequate Methods	77
3.4	Research Methods	77
3.4.1	Research Objective and Sampling	77
3.4.2	Sites of Research	79
3.4.3	Qualitative Interviews as a Data Collecting Method	82
	3.4.3.1 The Benefits of Narrations and the Role of the Interviewer	82
	3.4.3.2 The Narrative Interview	85
3.4.4	Grounded Theory as a Data Analysing Method	87
	3.4.4.1 From Data to Theory (and Back and Forth)	87
	3.4.4.2 Coding in Grounded Theory	89
	3.4.4.3 Initial and Focused Coding	90
	3.4.4.4 From Categorizing to Theorizing	92
3.4.5	Methodical Proceeding and Reflection	93
3.4.6	Quality Aspects: Criteria for Evaluation	97

3.4.7	Ethical Research Concerns	99
3.5	Self-Positioning as a Researcher	103
3.6	Synopsis: Approaching Postcolonial Researching	107
4	Theoretical Framework: Revising Concepts of Migration
	Studies	109
4.1	Migration in the North and the South	110
4.2	Popular Migration Notions: Problematic or Pointless	115
4.2.1	Integration: Irrelevant in South-South Migration and Counterproductive in General	115
4.2.1.1	Integration as a Non-topic in the South	115
4.2.1.2	Integration as Performative Contradiction	119
4.2.2	Identity	121
4.2.3	Transnationalism	124
4.2.4	Diaspora	125
4.3	Nation (state) and Citizenship	127
4.3.1	Nations and Nation States Worldwide: Same but Different	128
4.3.1.1	The Eurocentric Concept of the Nation	128
4.3.1.2	Nations of the South: a Post-/ Decolonial Critique	132
4.3.1.2.1	An Alternative View: the Modern Nation State, its Colonial Genealogy and Legacy	133
4.3.1.2.2	Falling From the Ideal Type: Nationalism in the South	135
4.3.1.2.3	The African Context: Misapplications of the Nation State Model	137
4.3.1.2.4	Nationality and Citizenship ... and Migration	140
4.3.1.3	Nationality and Hyphen-Nations	141
4.3.2	Grades and Shades of Citizenship	143
4.4	Xenophobia: Controversial and Contested	146
4.5	Synopsis: Conceptual Reflections	148

5	Finding Ways to and in Cape Town: Challenges and Mitigating Factors	151
5.1	Introducing My Informants	151
5.1.1	Meeting Zimbabweans in Observatory and Dunoon	151
5.1.2	Motivations for Coming to South Africa	157
5.2	Coming to Cape Town	158
5.2.1	Chatunga: “It’s Not Easy”	159
5.2.2	Masimba: “I Had to Beg Like a Beggar”	160
5.2.3	Mudiwa: “It Wasn’t Though at all”	161
5.2.4	Ways of Migrating and Arriving in Cape Town	163
5.3	Challenges and Hindrances	164
5.3.1	“The Visa Part, That’s Where the Whole Complication is”: Identity Documents and Formal Permits	164
5.3.2	“Adopting, and Adapting, and Adjusting”: Work, Employment, and Qualifications	168
5.3.2.1	Finding Work	168
5.3.2.2	Formal Qualifications and Employment	172
5.3.2.3	Working Conditions	174
5.3.3	Accommodation: “It’s Fucking Expensive”	177
5.3.4	Remittances: “It’s a Must”	180
5.3.5	Language: “My Type of Xhosa is Ndebele”	183
5.3.6	Crime and Safety: “I get that I’m not Safe”	186
5.3.7	Hostility and Discrimination	190
5.3.7.1	Being From Another Country: “That Kind of Stigmatization Amongst our Fellow Brothers”	190
5.3.7.2	Racism: “That Thing of Black and White”	196
5.3.7.3	Intersectional Discrimination: “They don’t Like us Here”	199
5.3.8	Emotional Challenges	201
5.3.8.1	Worries, Anxiety, and Expectations: “I can’t talk”	202
5.3.8.2	Shock and Homesickness: “I don’t Want to Stay”	204
5.3.8.3	Frustration: “Back to Square one Again”	205

5.3.8.4	Fear, Despair, and Feeling Powerless: “What can you do?”	207
5.3.9	A Multitude of Intertwined Challenges for Migrants	209
5.4	Mitigating and Assisting Factors	210
5.4.1	Partial and Non-issues: “We just Walked Through”	210
5.4.2	Social Contacts as Mitigating Factor	211
5.5	Synopsis: Recourse to Nationality Among Challenges and Mitigations	216
6	Collective Self-description: Actual, Vague, and Absent Figures of Identification	219
6.1	Common Collectives: Family, Friends, Work Colleagues, House Mates, and Others	221
6.2	Singular and Scarce Collectives: Figures of the Other(ed)	223
6.2.1	Being Black and being African	223
6.2.2	Immigrants and Foreigners	225
6.2.2.1	“A Certain type of Immigrant”	225
6.2.2.2	Note on Absent Terms: Migrant and Diasporan	227
6.2.2.3	Uses of the Term “Foreigner”	229
6.2.2.4	Wearing the “Uniform of being a Foreigner”	233
6.2.3	“These Other People”: Efforts at Differentiation	236
6.3	Zimbabweans: “Us, People from Zimbabwe”	238
6.3.1	Characteristics of Zimbabweans	238
6.3.2	The “We” in Zimbabwe	243
6.3.3	The Concrete “We” and the Abstract “Zimbabweans”	244
6.4	Synopsis: “Zimbabwean” as a Single Source of Affirmative Identification	249
7	The others: Comparisons to (Other) Collectives	253
7.1	Me and the Others	253
7.1.1	Self-comparison to Other Migrants: “They just Forget”	253
7.1.2	Comparisons to Zimbabweans	255
7.1.2.1	Zimbabweans in South Africa: “It’s a Different Story for Me”	255

	7.1.2.2	Zimbabweans in Zimbabwe: “They are Actually Different”	260
	7.1.2.3	Justifying by Comparison	262
7.2		Comparison to South Africa and its Residents	263
	7.2.1	South Africa and Zimbabwe in Comparison: Two Sides of the Same Narrative	263
	7.2.1.1	South Africa “is Better”	263
	7.2.1.2	... but “South Africa is not the Destiny”	268
	7.2.1.3	Topos of Freedom	272
	7.2.1.3.1	Being free in South Africa	272
	7.2.1.3.2	Being free in Zimbabwe	275
	7.2.1.3.3	Same Freedom, just Different	278
	7.2.1.4	Constructing Antipodes	280
	7.2.1.5	Rationalizations: Accounting for Contradictions and Ambivalences	282
	7.2.1.6	Morality in South Africa	284
	7.2.2	Comparison to South Africans	287
	7.2.2.1	South Africans and Zimbabweans ex negativo	287
	7.2.2.2	The complementary Other	294
	7.2.2.3	Stereotypes and Reality: on the Intergroup-relation	297
7.3		Synopsis: Moral and Ambivalent Underpinnings of Nationality	300
8		“It’s not easy if you are Zimbabwean”: Being Zimbabwean in South Africa	303
	8.1	Strategies of Managing Hostility	304
	8.1.1	Claiming the Moral High Ground	305
	8.1.2	Get Cracking	308
	8.1.3	Claiming the Right to Belong	309
	8.1.4	Living a “Soldier’s Life”	312
	8.1.5	Circumventing Resentments: Between Understanding and Ignorance	315
	8.1.6	Faith in God	318
	8.1.7	Differences of Discrimination and Managing Strategies	319
8.2		The Tricky Matter of Return	322

8.2.1	“Home is Best”	323
8.2.2	The Chorus of Return	325
8.2.3	“Going Back Home”, a Questionable “Option”	328
8.2.4	Future Plans	331
8.2.5	The Lack of Alternatives	332
8.3	Being Zimbabwean: National Origin as a Source of Certainty	334
8.3.1	Taking Nationality for Granted	334
8.3.2	Nationality as a Disadvantage	337
8.3.3	The Role of Idealization: Zimbabwe as Topos of Self-esteem and Strategic Means	340
8.3.4	Zimbabweanness as Active Defence	342
8.4	Alternatives Sources for Identification	345
8.4.1	Appreciation of Entertainment Opportunities and Leisure Activities	345
8.4.2	Being Part of a Student Community	346
8.4.3	Team Building in Sportive or Music Activities	347
8.4.4	Membership in Church Communities	348
8.4.5	Individual Solutions	349
8.5	Synopsis: Strategic Zimbabweanness and Nationality as Contingent Placeholder	350
9	Examining Insider-Outsider Dynamics	353
9.1	Those Who are Established and the Outsiders	354
9.1.1	The Case of Winston Parva	354
9.1.2	South African Insiders Versus Migrant Outsiders	356
9.1.3	Zimbabwean In-Group vis-à-vis South African Out-Group	359
9.1.4	Fragile Imbalance	361
9.2	Insights from Social Identity Theory	363
9.3	The Curious Figure of the Foreigner	368
9.3.1	Sociological Thoughts on the Foreigner	368
9.3.2	“The Foreign” and “the South African”	370
9.4	Synopsis: Risky Group Constellations	374
10	Nationality, Citizenship, and Belonging	377
10.1	Zimbabwean Nationality	378
10.2	Citizenship in South Africa	381
10.2.1	On Legal Status	382
10.2.2	On Residence	385

10.2.3	Bifurcated Citizenship	386
10.3	Political Claims for Humanist Reasons	388
10.4	Nationality Revisited	393
10.4.1	Nationality Without “Identity”	393
10.4.2	The I—We Relation of Zimbabweans	395
10.4.3	“Zimbabwean” as Subject Position	397
10.5	Synopsis: Nationality in a Nutshell	403
11	Conclusion: Paradoxes of Nationality in Theory and Practice	407
	Bibliography	417